Maryline Ah-Kiow | Interview preparation

Bilingual Customer Care Associate, Sharing Economy · Definity

Prepared 29 October 2026. Use the answers as speaking guides, not as a script to memorize word for word.

This version follows the LinkedIn posting Maryline identified. An earlier draft followed a different copy of a similar advertisement. That copy named Uber and listed hours until 8:00 p.m., with occasional weekends. This posting does not name a platform, and it sets the shift window at 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Eastern.

Best positioning. Experienced bilingual contact-centre professional who is calm, accurate, and steady with people at a difficult moment.

Main proof points. More than ten years in customer service; current federal contact-centre work taking and dispatching urgent requests; English and French fluency; SAP, databases, and careful documentation.

Core interview message. I listen first, I record the facts accurately, and I stay with the issue until the customer knows what happens next.

Job posting

Bilingual Customer Care Associate, Sharing Economy

Definity · Ontario, Canada · full time · entry level

Source: LinkedIn posting 4474190393, checked 29 October 2026. LinkedIn listed it as posted about three weeks earlier.

The posting uses “sharing economy” and does not name Uber or another platform. Maryline should say “sharing-economy customers” unless the interviewer names one. If they ask what the term means, a safe line is: “I understand it as the first step of a claim for customers who use sharing platforms, and I would learn exactly which customers this team serves during training.”

LinkedIn marks the job entry level. That means new to insurance claims. The posting says insurance experience is not required. Maryline should speak as an experienced customer-service professional who is new to claims, not as someone new to work.

What the associate does

She uses InsurCloud to guide customers through the first steps of a claim. No prior insurance experience is required. Definity describes structured daytime hours, training on systems such as Guidewire, and a path toward a longer career in insurance.

- Answer incoming calls, and call customers back, in a courteous and compassionate way.
- Listen for what matters to the customer in this claim, and establish trust.
- Gather the information needed to assess the claim, in a natural conversation.
- Enter that information accurately in InsurCloud and set up the claim.
- Give the insured basic information on coverage, and arrange any necessary supplemental services.
- Create the first notice of loss (FNOL) and give the insured the contact details they need.

What they ask for

- Fluent English and French. Bilingualism is required.
- Secondary school diploma at minimum. Maryline’s Cambridge School Certificate is the equivalent of an Ontario Grade 12 diploma.

- Successful customer conversations: empathy, calm, telephone etiquette, and active listening.
- Clear communication and comfort with computer applications.
- Customer service or inbound call-centre experience is an asset. Insurance experience is not required.
- CDS or Guidewire experience is an asset. Do not claim either. Maryline has not used them. The posting also says Definity provides training on systems such as Guidewire.
- Shifts are scheduled between 8:00 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Eastern. The posting calls these structured daytime hours. It does not mention evenings or weekends.
- Hybrid work is listed for most roles. The team description says people work from the office and virtually depending on the work. The posting gives Ontario as the location and does not name the office.
- Posted salary range: $49,300 to $82,100. The posting says actual pay depends on location, skills, education, experience, working conditions, and the local labour market.
- Background checks, including a criminal record check and leadership references.
- Benefits listed on the posting, for her information rather than as an interview opening: a share-ownership program, a discretionary incentive program, pension and savings programs with company-matched RRSP contributions, paid volunteer days and donation matching, tuition assistance and paid study time, wellness and recognition programs, and discounts. No amounts are given for those items.

Company facts worth knowing

From the LinkedIn posting and definityfinancial.com, checked 29 October 2026:

- The posting describes Definity as the parent of Economical Insurance, Sonnet Insurance, Family Insurance Solutions, and Petline Insurance. It wants to be one of Canada’s leading property and casualty insurers.
- Definity’s own site says the company protects homes, vehicles, businesses, farms, and pets, and that it was formed in 2021 when Economical demutualized. Economical wrote its first policy in 1871.
- The posting says Definity was named a Great Place to Work in Canada for women, for youth, and for inclusion. One mention is enough if culture comes up. Do not recite the slogan list.
- The line she can use naturally is that Definity wants to make insurance better, and that this job is the first step of a claim for a sharing-economy customer.

How her experience maps to the role

What they want	Maryline’s evidence	Line to repeat
Calm, empathic phone service	More than ten years of bilingual customer service, including upset callers	I stay calm, I let the person finish, and I keep them informed.
Inbound contact centre	Current PSPC National Service Call Centre	I already work in a busy inbound centre.
Daytime schedule	She can keep a set daily schedule. Her current role is rotating, which shows she attends the hours she is given.	I am comfortable with shifts between 8:00 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.
Training on new systems	She learned SAP, databases, and federal procedures on the job.	I have not used InsurCloud or Guidewire. I am ready for the training.
Gather facts and open a file	She collects the location and nature of a trouble call, documents it, and routes it	I ask for the facts, I write them down accurately, and I send them to the right place.
Ownership and follow-up	Larson Juhl follow-up on pending inquiries; Newell coordination with other teams	I take the issue and I follow it through.

What they want	Maryline’s evidence	Line to repeat
Plain language	Explains product, price, status, and solutions in English and French	I make the next step easy to understand.
Systems and accuracy	SAP, databases, scripts, and federal documentation	I learn the system and I check the entry before I leave it.
Confidentiality	Federal workplace and customer account information	I only use the information the task needs, and I protect it.
No insurance background	The posting says insurance experience is not required	I will learn the products from Definity’s training and I will not guess.

60-second introduction

Question. Tell me about yourself.

I’m a bilingual customer service professional with more than ten years of experience helping clients in busy contact-centre and order-service environments. In my current role with Public Services and Procurement Canada, I receive and dispatch maintenance and trouble calls for federal buildings and other facilities. I gather the right information, document it accurately, and route the request so the next team can act. Before that, I supported customers at Larson Juhl, Newell, and Provincial Wallcoverings, where I handled orders, complaints, returns, and delivery issues in English and French. I’m interested in this Definity role because it uses those skills at the first step of a sharing-economy claim. I would listen with care, record the claim information accurately, and help the customer understand what happens next.

> Practice note. Aim for 60 to 75 seconds. Smile, slow down on the last two sentences, and finish on why this role is the logical next step. Do not add a list of every employer if time is short. The federal role, one earlier customer-service line, and the Definity close are enough.

Same introduction in French.

Je suis une professionnelle bilingue du service à la clientèle, avec plus de dix ans d’expérience dans des centres de contact et des services de commandes très occupés. Dans mon poste actuel à Services publics et Approvisionnement Canada, je reçois et j’achemine des demandes d’entretien et des appels de service pour des immeubles fédéraux et d’autres installations. Je recueille les bons renseignements, je les documente avec exactitude et j’oriente la demande pour que la prochaine équipe puisse agir. Avant cela, j’ai aidé les clients chez Larson Juhl, Newell et Provincial Wallcoverings, où je traitais des commandes, des plaintes, des retours et des problèmes de livraison, en français et en anglais. Ce poste chez Definity m’intéresse parce qu’il utilise ces compétences à la première étape d’une réclamation dans l’économie du partage. J’écouterais avec attention, j’inscrirais les renseignements du sinistre avec exactitude et j’aiderais le client à comprendre la prochaine étape.

Core questions

Why do you want to work at Definity?

> What they are testing. Motivation, and whether she knows what the company does.

I’m interested in Definity because the work is helping people when something has already gone wrong. I like roles where I can reduce confusion and help someone take the next step with confidence. This sharing-economy role is that first step. It uses the bilingual customer service I already do, and the posting says insurance experience is not required because Definity trains people on the claims systems. Definity also comes from Economical, which has insured Canadians for a very long time. I would like to learn this work properly and build a longer career in insurance.

Why this customer-care role, rather than a general call-centre job?

> What they are testing. Realistic expectations. This role opens the claim. It does not settle it.

The work is close to what I do now. Someone calls with a problem, I listen, I collect the right details, I record them, and I make sure the request goes to the right place. Here, that request is the first notice of a claim, and the caller may be upset or shaken. I am comfortable with that. I would not pretend to decide the claim. I would open the file properly, explain the next step in plain language, and follow the process for anything that has to go to another person. The posting also describes this as a place to learn insurance and stay in the field. That is what I want.

What makes you a strong candidate?

> What they are testing. Evidence, without a long life story.

I bring many years of bilingual customer service in high-volume environments. I stay calm with a frustrated person, I ask questions before I offer a solution, and I document carefully. I have used SAP, databases, and other business tools, so I can learn InsurCloud. My current federal role has strengthened the part this job needs most: gathering the facts of an urgent request and sending them forward accurately. Insurance itself is new to me, and the posting says that is acceptable. I would learn it from Definity’s training.

You do not have insurance experience. How would you handle the learning curve?

> What they are testing. Learning agility, and humility without underselling herself.

I would use the training the posting describes, including InsurCloud and systems such as Guidewire. I would take organized notes and practise the calls that happen most often. If I did not know an answer, I would say so, check the approved resource, and then come back with the right information. I would not guess about coverage. I learn by asking questions and by applying the answer to the next real call.

What does excellent customer service mean to you?

> What they are testing. Ownership, not only a friendly voice.

It means the person feels heard, the information is accurate, and the process is as easy as it can be. Friendliness matters, and so do ownership and honest timing. If I cannot solve something on this call, I say what I have done, what another team must do, and when the customer can expect an update. They should not have to tell the story twice.

How do you deal with an upset caller?

> What they are testing. De-escalation, boundaries, and documentation. For this role, the caller may have just been in an incident.

If the call is about an incident, I first make sure the person is safe and not asking me to replace emergency services. Then I let them explain without interrupting. I acknowledge how the situation is affecting them, I confirm what I understood, and I ask focused questions. I explain what I can do now, what has to go to another team, and when they will hear something more. I stay calm and I do not take the frustration personally. I document the conversation so the next person has the facts.

How do you manage a high volume of work?

> What they are testing. Priorities, speed, and quality together.

I look at what is urgent, what information is missing, and what I can finish now. I document each interaction as I go, and I keep a note of anything that needs a follow-up. I focus on one caller at a time, and I still pay attention to the service target. Accuracy matters. An error in a claim file creates more work for the customer and for the team.

How do you make complicated information easy to understand?

> What they are testing. Plain language. At Definity this means a claim step or a basic coverage point, not a product catalogue.

I make sure I understand it myself first. Then I use ordinary words, I break it into a few steps, and I skip terms the customer does not need. I check by asking them to tell me the next step, or by inviting a question. I have done this with orders, prices, delivery dates, and solutions. I would do the same with the claim process.

Tell me about using several systems at once.

> What they are testing. Accuracy while talking.

In customer service I have used order systems, SAP, databases, and scripts while I was on the phone. I might need to confirm who the customer is, find the order or the request, update it, and write the note. I verify the person’s details first, I finish one update before I start the next, and I read my note before I close the file. I have not used InsurCloud, CDS, or Guidewire. The posting says Definity trains people on those systems, and I would learn them the same way I learned SAP.

How do you protect confidential information?

> What they are testing. Trust and procedure. A claim file is sensitive.

I open only the information the task needs. I confirm identity the way the process requires. I do not discuss a claim where someone else can hear it. I record the information in the correct system. If I am not sure what I can say, I stop and check. I do not take a chance with someone else’s information.

How do you respond to feedback?

> What they are testing. Coachability in a new industry.

I listen for the specific change they want. If I am not sure, I ask for an example. I apply it, and I watch whether the result improves. Feedback is part of learning a new process, especially in the first months.

Are you comfortable when priorities change?

> What they are testing. Flexibility with control.

Yes. In my current work, a routine maintenance request and a trouble call do not have the same urgency. I collect the key facts, I reassess what should go first, and I route the urgent issue. I also keep notes so the less urgent work is not forgotten.

Are you comfortable with the schedule?

> What they are testing. A clear yes, only if it is true. Adjust this answer if it is not.

Yes. I understand that shifts for this role are scheduled between 8:00 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Eastern. I am comfortable with that daytime window. In my current role I work rotating shifts, including evenings, weekends, and holidays, so I am used to being present for the hours I am given.

What are your salary expectations?

> What they are testing. Alignment with the posted range, without a negotiation speech.

The posting shows a range of $49,300 to $82,100, and it says the actual figure depends on the location and on experience. I am comfortable discussing compensation inside that range, based on the responsibilities of the role.

Do not open by asking for the top of the range. For a first insurance role, the posting itself says experience affects pay.

Why are you leaving your current position?

> What they are testing. A positive reason. Never criticize Public Services and Procurement Canada, the public service, the pay, or the shifts.

I am grateful for this role. It has taught me how to handle urgent requests, how to document them, and how to work carefully with information that is not mine. I am now looking for a place where I can keep doing bilingual customer service and learn a new field. Definity appeals to me because the caller often needs help at a stressful moment, and because the first record of the claim has to be right.

Behavioural stories

Keep each story to about 90 seconds: situation, task, action, result. Do not invent a number or a result. Add one real detail only if Maryline remembers it clearly.

A difficult customer

Situation. At Larson Juhl, I regularly took calls from customers who were unhappy about a product, an order, or the service.

Task. I had to understand the issue, reduce the effort for the customer, and find the right next step.

Action. I listened without interrupting. I clarified the details, I checked the system, and I explained the solution that was actually available. If another team had to act, I documented the case and I followed up with the customer.

Result. The customer got a clear explanation and did not have to start again with someone else. The issue moved forward, and the conversation stayed professional.

Working with other teams

Situation. At Newell, an order or a delivery problem sometimes needed Sales, Distribution, or the warehouse.

Task. I had to coordinate the information and get the customer an accurate answer.

Action. I confirmed the order, I contacted the right team, I updated the account, and I tracked the issue until I had what I needed. Then I told the customer the update and the next step.

Result. The teams were working from the same information, and the customer was not passed from person to person.

A time accuracy mattered

Situation. At Newell, I entered new orders and changes that arrived by phone, email, and fax.

Task. The entry had to be right, because a mistake could affect price, stock, or delivery.

Action. I confirmed the change with the customer, I checked it in SAP, and I reviewed the order before I completed it. I also updated the account so the next person had the right details.

Result. The request was handled from current information, which reduced the chance of an avoidable order or delivery problem.

A time you had to manage urgency

Situation. In my current federal role, I receive both ordinary maintenance requests and trouble calls for buildings and other facilities.

Task. I have to collect enough information and send the request through the correct channel.

Action. I ask focused questions. I confirm the location and the nature of the problem. I compare that with the process, and I document it clearly before I route it.

Result. The next team has what it needs to act, and the caller knows the request was recorded and sent forward.

Bridge to Definity, if they ask why this story matters. That is the same discipline as a first notice of loss: the right facts, a complete file, and a clear handoff.

Learning a new system or process

Situation. In my customer-service roles I have had to learn products, procedures, databases, and systems such as SAP.

Task. I needed to become accurate without letting the service slip.

Action. I took the training, I kept notes, I practised the common tasks, and I used the approved steps. I asked when I was unsure, and I reviewed mistakes so I would not repeat them.

Result. I became comfortable using the tools to answer questions, process requests, and document them the same way each time.

A mistake, or something you would do differently

Choose a real, low-risk example. Take responsibility, and spend the time on the correction. A safe shape, if it is true:

Earlier in my career I learned that acting before I had confirmed every detail creates extra follow-up. I corrected the record, I told the right person, and I changed my routine. I now repeat the key details back to the customer and I review the entry before I submit it. My work became more consistent.

Claims language

Maryline does not need to sound like an adjuster. She needs plain, accurate words, and a clear limit on what this role decides.

What is a first notice of loss?

A first notice of loss, or FNOL, is the first report that an incident happened. In this role I would collect the facts, open the claim in the system, give the customer the contact details, and explain the next step. I would not settle the claim on that call.

What is a claim?

A claim is the customer's request for the insurer to respond after a loss. My job at the first step is to record it completely and accurately.

What is coverage?

Coverage is what the policy responds to. I would give only the basic information Definity has approved for this role. If I was not sure the loss was covered, I would say that I need to confirm it. I would not promise a payment.

A customer asks, "Will you pay for this?"

I understand why you want to know. I can explain the next step and the basic information I am allowed to give. I cannot promise that the claim will be paid until it has been reviewed under the policy. I will make sure the file has the facts and that you know who follows up.

What if you do not know the answer?

I would not guess, especially about coverage or money. I would tell the customer that I want the correct information, I would check the approved resource or the right team, and I would come back with a clear update.

What does InsurCloud refer to?

It is the claims system named in the posting, where the associate enters the claim and sets up the file. Maryline has not used it. The honest line is: I have not used InsurCloud yet. I have learned other systems, including SAP, and I would learn this one in training before I relied on it with a customer.

Role-play lines

A customer is upset that help is taking too long

- "I understand how frustrating it is to wait, especially when you need to know what happens next."
- Confirm who they are and look up the file in the approved system.
- Say what is already done, what is still missing, and what the next step is.
- Give a realistic time for the next update. Document the call and keep ownership of any follow-up you promised.

A customer wants an answer you do not have

- "I want to make sure I give you the correct information, so I am going to verify that."
- Use the approved resource or the right internal team.
- Return with a clear answer or a realistic next step.

- Do not guess, and do not hide the uncertainty.

A customer does not understand a term, such as deductible or first notice of loss

- Acknowledge the question without making them feel foolish.
- Give a short explanation and one simple example from the approved material.
- Check: “Would it help if I explained how that applies to this claim?”
- Stay inside the role. Do not give a personal opinion about whether they should have bought different coverage.

The customer may need a supplemental service

- Confirm what the process allows before offering it.
- Do not promise a tow, a rental, or another service unless the procedure says this role arranges it.
- Explain what you can arrange now and what another team must approve.
- Document what was requested and what was arranged.

Two urgent calls at once

- Look at immediate safety, deadlines, and the risk of a wrong or incomplete file.
- Take the higher-risk call first.
- Acknowledge the second call and set an expectation so it is not lost.
- Document both, and ask for help if the team needs to cover one of them.

Bilingual practice

The posting requires fluency in English and French. Be ready to switch without translating word for word. Warmth and clarity should match in both languages.

Parlez-moi de votre expérience.

Je travaille en service à la clientèle depuis plus de dix ans, surtout dans des environnements bilingues et à volume élevé. Dans mon poste actuel à Services publics et Approvisionnement Canada, je reçois et j’achemine des demandes d’entretien et des appels de service pour des immeubles et d’autres installations. Avant cela, je traitais des commandes, des plaintes, des retours et des problèmes de livraison. Mon approche est simple : j’écoute, je vérifie les renseignements, j’explique clairement la prochaine étape et je fais le suivi.

Pourquoi Definity?

Definity m’intéresse parce que le travail consiste à aider une personne au moment où quelque chose a mal tourné. J’aime rendre une situation plus claire et aider le client à avancer. Ce poste me permettrait d’utiliser mon expérience bilingue, tout en apprenant la première étape d’un dossier de réclamation. Je sais que je n’ai pas d’expérience en assurance. Je compte apprendre avec la formation de Definity, et je ne devinerai pas lorsqu’il s’agit de la garantie.

Un client mécontent

Je laisse d’abord la personne expliquer. S’il s’agit d’un incident, je m’assure qu’elle est en sécurité. Je reconnais l’effet de la situation, je confirme ce que j’ai compris et je pose des questions précises. Ensuite, j’explique ce que je peux faire, la prochaine étape et le moment où elle peut s’attendre à une mise à jour. Je garde un ton calme et je documente l’échange.

Qu’est-ce qu’un avis de sinistre?

Un avis de sinistre est le premier signalement d’un incident à l’assureur. Dans ce rôle, je recueillerais les faits, j’ouvrirais le dossier avec exactitude et j’expliquerais les prochaines étapes approuvées. Je ne réglerais pas le sinistre et je ne promettrais pas un paiement.

“I want to make sure I give you the correct information.”

Je veux m’assurer de vous donner les bons renseignements. Je vais donc vérifier l’information avant de vous répondre.

Pourquoi devrions-nous vous embaucher?

Vous devriez m’embaucher parce que j’apporte plus de dix ans de service à la clientèle bilingue. Je reste calme lorsqu’une personne est frustrée, et je vérifie l’information avant de répondre. Je sais utiliser différents systèmes, documenter un échange avec précision et faire le suivi. L’assurance est un nouveau domaine pour moi, mais j’ai déjà appris des produits, des procédures et des systèmes, et je ne devine pas lorsqu’une réponse doit être exacte.

Quelles sont vos principales forces?

L’écoute, la patience et le sens du suivi. Je comprends la demande avant de proposer une solution. Je communique clairement en français et en anglais, et je reste professionnelle lorsque la situation est urgente. Je fais très attention à l’exactitude de ce que j’inscris dans les systèmes.

Quel aspect souhaitez-vous améliorer?

Quand je commence un nouveau poste, j’aime comprendre les procédures en détail avant de me sentir complètement à l’aise. Cela peut me rendre très prudente au début. Pour avancer plus vite, je prends des notes, je pratique les situations fréquentes et je demande une rétroaction tôt. Cette méthode m’aide à gagner en confiance sans sacrifier l’exactitude.

Plusieurs priorités

Dans mon poste actuel, je peux recevoir une demande d’entretien ordinaire et un appel plus urgent. Je recueille les renseignements essentiels, je juge la priorité et j’achemine la demande au bon service. Je documente chaque échange pour l’équipe qui prend le relais. Je gère l’urgence sans perdre les autres demandes.

Collaboration

Chez Newell, certains problèmes de commande ou de livraison exigeaient les ventes, la distribution ou l’entrepôt. Je vérifiais les détails, je parlais à la bonne équipe, je mettais le dossier à jour et j’expliquais la prochaine étape au client. Le client n’était pas transféré d’une personne à l’autre sans raison.

Comment donner des renseignements exacts

Je vérifie dans les outils et les procédures approuvés avant de répondre. Je confirme les détails importants avec le client, surtout un nom, un lieu, une date ou un numéro de dossier. Si je ne suis pas certaine, je ne devine pas. Je consulte la bonne ressource, puis je reviens avec une réponse claire.

Si le problème ne peut pas être réglé immédiatement

J’explique ce que j’ai vérifié, ce qui reste à faire et quelle équipe doit intervenir. Je donne un délai réaliste pour la prochaine mise à jour. Je documente le dossier et je fais le suivi prévu. Même si la solution n’est pas immédiate, le client doit sentir que sa demande est prise en charge.

Établir la confiance

J’écoute et je montre que j’ai compris. Je donne des renseignements clairs, je ne promets pas ce que je ne peux pas tenir, et je respecte le délai que j’ai annoncé. La confiance vient de la constance et de l’exactitude.

Si le client demande une décision sur la garantie

Je reconnais la question. Je peux expliquer l’information générale que mon rôle me permet de donner. Je n’offre pas une décision personnelle sur la couverture si cela dépasse mon rôle. Je suis le processus de Definity et j’oriente le client vers la bonne personne.

Apprendre un nouveau produit ou une nouvelle procédure

Je commence par la formation et les ressources officielles. Je prends des notes simples, je regroupe les situations les plus fréquentes et je pratique les étapes dans l’ordre. Je pose des questions précises. Je veux comprendre la raison de l’étape, parce que cela m’aide à l’expliquer.

La rétroaction d’un superviseur

J’écoute et je m’assure de comprendre le changement attendu. Si nécessaire, je demande un exemple. J’applique la rétroaction et je vérifie si mon travail s’est amélioré.

Une erreur dans un dossier

Je vérifie d’abord les faits. Ensuite, je suis immédiatement le processus pour corriger l’erreur ou la signaler, et j’informe la bonne personne. Je documente ce qui s’est passé et ce que j’ai fait. Je cherche aussi la cause, pour ne pas répéter l’erreur. Dans un dossier de réclamation, une erreur de fait peut avoir des conséquences pour le client, donc je la traite tout de suite.

Dans quelques années

À court terme, je veux bien maîtriser ce rôle, offrir un service fiable et devenir une personne sur qui l’équipe peut compter. L’annonce parle d’une formation et d’un chemin pour bâtir une carrière en assurance. C’est ce que je souhaite. Avec le temps, j’aimerais assumer davantage de responsabilités si l’occasion se présente. Je ne prétends pas connaître déjà le chemin précis à l’intérieur de Definity.

Questions à poser

J’aimerais savoir à quoi ressemble une bonne performance pendant les trois premiers mois. J’aimerais aussi comprendre comment la formation est organisée pour une personne qui arrive sans expérience en assurance, et à quel moment ce rôle transmet le dossier à l’équipe suivante.

Mini-exercice de changement de langue

Votre approche, en une phrase. J’écoute d’abord, je vérifie les faits, puis j’explique clairement la prochaine étape, et je reste responsable du suivi.

Vous devez vérifier. Je veux m’assurer de vous donner une réponse exacte. Je vais vérifier l’information, puis je vous expliquerai clairement la prochaine étape.

Conclure l’appel. Avant de terminer, je vais résumer ce que nous avons fait et la prochaine étape. Est-ce qu’il y a autre chose que je peux clarifier pour vous?

Questions Maryline can ask

- What does strong performance look like in the first three months?

- What does a typical first-notice call include, and when does this role hand the file to the next team?
- How is training organized for someone new to insurance, including InsurCloud and systems such as Guidewire, before they take calls alone?
- How does the team support an associate when a caller is distressed or angry?
- The posting sets shifts between 8:00 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. How are those hours assigned?
- The posting describes hybrid work for most roles. How does this team divide office time and virtual time, and which Ontario office is it based in?
- What are the next steps in the process?

Ask two or three, not the whole list. The training question and the handoff question are the strongest.

Questions to avoid, or to reframe

Avoid as an opening question	Better version
Will this become permanent?	How is success in this role typically reviewed?
How quickly can I be promoted?	What skills distinguish people who later take on a broader claims role?
Is the work stressful?	What are the busiest periods, and how does the team support associates then?
Can I avoid weekends?	The posting describes 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Are those shifts on weekdays?
Can I work fully from home?	How does this team divide office time and virtual time?
Are you offering the top of the salary range?	I am comfortable discussing pay within the posted range.

Closing

Is there anything else you would like us to know?

I am very interested in the role. I bring many years of bilingual client service, and I am used to busy work where accuracy, calm, and follow-through matter. Insurance is new to me. I am ready to learn it properly, and I have a record of learning products, procedures, and systems. I would be glad to bring that care to the first step of a sharing-economy claim, and to learn the insurance process properly.

Interview-day checklist

- This is the LinkedIn Sharing Economy posting: Ontario, daytime hours from 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., hybrid for most roles. Confirm the office.
- Review this guide, the posting, and the résumé. Fix the 2025 start month if you know it.
- Prepare three real stories: an upset customer at Larson Juhl, a cross-team order at Newell, and an urgent federal service call.
- Practise the introduction and the closing out loud in English and French.
- Review FNOL, claim, coverage, and the line “I will not guess, and I will not promise payment.”
- If the interview is virtual, test the camera, microphone, internet, and link. Use a quiet, private, well-lit space.
- If it is in person, plan the route to the office and arrive early. Bring a printed résumé.
- Keep water and a short page of notes nearby. Do not read the answers.
- Answer the question first, then give one example.

- If you need a moment: “That’s a good question. Let me think for a moment.”
- End with two questions and a short restatement of interest.

One-page review

Three strengths. Bilingual service. Calm problem-solving. Accurate documentation.

Three examples. Upset customer at Larson Juhl. Cross-team order at Newell. Urgent service request at Public Services and Procurement Canada.

The insurance gap. I learn from the approved training, and I do not guess about coverage or payment.

Service formula. Listen. Clarify. Verify. Explain. Own. Document. Follow up.

Role boundary. Open a complete first notice. Explain the next step. Do not settle the claim.

Why Definity. Help a sharing-economy customer at the first step of a claim, learn the systems in training, and build a longer career in insurance.

Schedule. 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Eastern. Do not describe evenings or weekends unless the interviewer raises them.

Closing line. I am ready to learn the insurance process and to bring reliable bilingual support to that first conversation.

What the Wealthsimple guide contains that this Definity guide uses

There was no Definity guide in the repository to compare against. The comparison below is against the Wealthsimple guide. These parts are useful for Definity, and they are included above in Definity language.

- The 60-second shape: current federal role, earlier customer-service employers, then why this job. The Wealthsimple close was about making complicated financial information easier. The Definity close is the first step of a sharing-economy claim and an accurate file.
- The map from posting requirements to evidence to a repeatable line.
- The core answers: why this employer, why this role, why you, learning curve, excellent service, upset client, volume, plain language, several systems, confidentiality, feedback, changing priorities, schedule, salary, and why leave.
- The STAR set: difficult customer, other teams, accuracy, urgency, a new system, and a low-risk mistake. The urgency story is the one to lean on, because dispatching a trouble call is the closest work to opening a claim.
- The longer French section: strengths, an improvement area, priorities, collaboration, accuracy, a problem that cannot be fixed immediately, trust, the limit of the role, how she learns, feedback, an error in a file, the next few years, questions to ask, and a short language-switch drill.
- Questions for the interviewer, questions to reframe, a closing statement, a day-of checklist, and a one-page review.
- The service formula: listen, clarify, verify, explain, own, document, follow up.

What the Wealthsimple guide contains that this guide deliberately leaves out

Copying these into a Definity interview would pull the conversation toward the wrong job.

- Investing explanations: TFSA and RRSP, stocks, ETFs, diversification, risk tolerance, and “What should I invest in?” Definity needs FNOL, coverage boundaries, and “I will not promise payment” instead.
- The 100 percent remote pitch: private workspace, home internet, MacBook and equipment, and the work-from-anywhere allowance. This Definity posting says hybrid for most roles, with time in the office and time online depending on the work. It does not promise a fully remote job. Wealthsimple’s evening-and-weekend schedule also does not match. This posting’s window is 8:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Eastern.
- Slack, many browser tabs, and keyboard shortcuts as proof of technical fit. For Definity, the relevant systems point is SAP and databases now, then InsurCloud and Guidewire in Definity’s training. Do not claim she already uses CDS or Guidewire.
- Fintech curiosity as the reason for the move. The Definity reason is service at a stressful moment, plus careful records.
- Role-plays about a slow institutional transfer or a promotion deadline. Replace them with a delayed claim update, an unknown coverage answer, a supplemental service, and two urgent calls.
- Wealthsimple pay ($25.00 to $26.50 an hour) and benefits (health spending account, employer savings match, vacation, sick days). Use Definity’s range of $49,300 to $82,100. The LinkedIn posting lists share ownership, a discretionary incentive, pension and matched RRSP contributions, volunteer days, tuition assistance, and wellness programs. It gives no dollar amounts for those items, so she should not invent any, and she should not open the interview with benefits.
- “Why Wealthsimple makes finance easier for Canadians” as the motivation line.
